#3 Notre Dame Fighting Irish (7-0) at Navy Midshipmen

- The Irish take a vacation, playing Navy in San Diego. Hopefully the game is a fun jaunt for them as well.
- Game Prediction: Irish win, 33-13
- Bold Prediction: Brian Kelly puts Julian Love in at QB to run the wildcat offense in the third quarter. It's wildly successful, and another QB controversy ensues.
- Bill Prediction: Bill wears full Navy dress whites and is confused for a sailor by the old woman who lives next door to his house. He is not a sailor, but he is a gentleman, so he apologizes to her and to his country for his indiscretion.

Sunday - October 28

#Refreshed #Content

Hello,

Did you miss me? I know, me too.

Luckily for everyone who reads this weekly love ballad, I'm fully refreshed and back for more. And, luckily for me, I got to ride on my favorite train line, the South Shore, to make my triumphant return to South Bend from Chicago. If you've never ridden the South Shore, let me tell you about the experience in a nifty #list.

1. The chairs are too close together, which shames my tall, lanky body while shattering my kneecaps.
2. There's wifi. Yeah, that sounds good on paper, but there's actually five wifi options, none of which work, which shuffles your computer between the respective options. This experience is what I imagine purgatory is. You are trying to be productive and look at stories about dogs on the internet, like a good American, but the South Shore internet fiasco robs you of your ability to do so.
3. Sometimes, you sit in inward-facing chair since you got on the train before anyone else (victory).
4. Then, other times, after you claim victory over a large section of chairs, the next person to enter the train car, who smells like fermented olive oil, sits down in the same section of chairs, immediately across from you, his knees touching yours. It's like you're in a horror film. He stares at you until you are forced to move.
5. This happens to you at eight in the morning.
6. There are no garbage cans, unless you're in the bathroom.
7. Every single person will ask you to help them with their bags. And you will help them like a proper gentleman, but will not remove your headphones.

So it's a good time. It certainly gives you a good hunk of time to think about your life and what you have done over the break. In short, I ate a lot of fish and took a lot of trains. I got snowed on and sunburnt in the same day. Quite the break!

SONG OF THE WEEK - Get Back - The Beatles

MEME OF THE WEEK -

1L OF THE WEEK

The 1L of the week is Lexi Riccolo! Lexi gave up ten minutes of her Sunday night to answer my questions, which was very kind. If you see her in the Commons, buy her a coffee and ask her about the disparity in popularity between volleyball and soccer in various geographic areas!

Q: Where is your hometown?

A: I'm from Wheaton, Illinois, which is in the West Suburbs of Chicago.

Q: Where did you attend undergrad?

A: I went to University of Virginia.

Q: What did you do before law school?

A: I went and lived in Northern England and played volleyball for a University while I got my masters in business management. I was a libero. I played in undergrad in UVA, but went to Durham University for a program for American athletes.

Q: What is your best all-time Halloween costume? Why was it great?

A: I think my best was when I was Superman in Kindergarten - not Superwoman, Superman. There's a picture of me and four boys all wearing the same costume.

Q: Who is your favorite witch from Hocus Pocus?

A: I don't know their names, I just know the red head one who is the ring leader.

Q: What's your favorite horror movie of all time?

A: I don't really like horror movies, but actually this past week I started watching Gerald's Game. It's half-horror, half-psychological thriller. I would not recommend it.

Q: What's the coolest animal you have ever seen?

A: I saw a flounder once when I was snorkeling and it was kind of scary. They're just like big and flat, so when it turns you couldn't tell where it was in the water.

Q: Can you instruct someone on how to make an origami cootie-catcher?
If not, guess, now.

A: I have no idea, I don't even know what that is.

I explained what it is

Ohhhh!!! I wish!

Q: If you were a Dippin' Dots flavor, what flavor would you be?

A: Ummm... probably chocolate chip - I don't know the Dippin' Dots flavors.

Q: Do you have anything else you'd like to say to all of your fans?

A: Nope - I'm good.

Q: Who should I interview as 1L of the week next week?

A: I feel so bad throwing someone under the bus. When I saw my name I was like uggghhhhh. You know what, Becca Pronesti.

Okay y'all, these interviews are EXTREMELY pleasant experiences. Lexi even said as much after saying this.

#3LOL OF THE WEEK

This week's 3LOL of the week is Matt Razzano! Matt's a Double Domer, That means that if you look at his Facebook, you'll notice this picture, where Matt is sporting what I can only call an absolutely magnificent mustache. Matt - why, why did you ever get rid of this? I expect it to make a comeback for Movember.

Actually, I think I know the answer. Matt's a big football fan, so he was probably aware of a former Pennsylvania superstar linebacker, Rick Razzano (there aren't a ton of Razzano's in the United States, so Matt and Rick are almost certainly related). Rick, another major proponent of power mustaches, establish what, in Eastern PA, has become known as a "Ricklemeister," otherwise known to the rest of the world as "The Extra Double-Eyebrow."

Now, Rick Razzano isn't just a football player and a Virginia Tech Sports Hall of Famer. Rick was also major ice cream distributor. The ice cream business, as it were, helped spread word of the Ricklemeister far and wide, including South Bend.

It was ice cream that brought the previously-separated Razzanos together. However, the relationship was not meant to last. Late in his undergraduate career, Matt realized that Rick never actually made his own ice cream. The entire enterprise was a cult of personality. Rick's business profited almost entirely on the coattails of his mustache.

Devastated, Matt realized that if he truly wanted to control his own destiny and become the lawyer he eventually wanted to be, he would have to make a change. And he did - he is not the clean shaven man we all know and love.

So if you see Matt in the Commons, don't buy him an ice cream cone. Stick to coffee.

Long Reads of the Week

- A Genocide Incited on Facebook, With Posts From Myanmar's Military
 - Members of the Myanmar military were the prime operatives behind a systematic campaign on Facebook that stretched back half a decade and that targeted the country's mostly Muslim Rohingya minority group, the people said. The military exploited Facebook's wide reach in Myanmar, where it is so broadly used that many of the country's 18 million internet users confuse the Silicon Valley social media platform with the internet. Human rights groups blame the anti-Rohingya propaganda for inciting murders, rapes and the largest forced human migration in recent history.
- The Love Story That Upended the Texas Prison System
 - How Frances Jalet, one of the first women to graduate from Columbia Law School, and Fred Cruz, the first inmate to write a lawsuit on toilet paper that went all the way to the Supreme Court, teamed up to take on the Texas Department of Corrections for unconstitutional punishments and brutality.
